CARD OPTIONS

How do you want to track your fueling transactions?

By vehicle?

If you want to know when and where each individual vehicle is fueling, you would want to have a single card system with each card being assigned to a specific vehicle or unit number. You could use the odometer to capture mileage at each transaction as well as have the option for an additional data entry field for job number or driver number.

By driver?

For companies that want to track driver usage, you could also use a single card system. Each card could be assigned to a specific driver name or number. The vehicle information would then be entered at the time of fueling as additional data.

Driver & vehicle?

For comprehensive control of driver and vehicle, you could choose the two card system. Each vehicle would have a card assigned to it and each driver would have their card. This system is best if you have multiple drivers for the same vehicle. And it has an added benefit: if the vehicle card is misplaced or stolen, it cannot be used unless there is a driver card with it.

All cards

Can track odometer settings (to calculate mileage) plus an additional data entry field that can be activated to allow job numbers, etc. to be captured.
